MISCELLANY

There is no Death.

There is no death! The stars go down To rise upon some fairer shore; • And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown They saine forever more.

There is no death! The dust we tread Shall change beneath the summer show ers.

To golder ain or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow tinted flowers.

The granite rocks disorganize
To feed the hungry moss they bear;
The forest leaves drink daily life
From out the viewless air.

There is no death! The leaves may fall,
The flowers may fade and pass away—
They only wait through wintry hours,
The coming of the May.

There is no death! An angel form Walks o'er the earth with silent tread-He bears our best loved things away, And then we call them "dead."

He leaves our hearts all desolate— He plucks our fairest, sweetest flowers; Transported into bliss, they now Adorn immortal bowers.

The bird-like voice, whose joyous tonts Made glad his seene of sin and strife, Sings now in everlasting song Amid the tree of life.

And where he sees a smile too bright,
Or hearts too pure for taint and vice,
He bears it to that world of light
To dwell in Paradise.

Born into that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them—the same,
Except in sin and pain.

And ever near us, though unseen, The dear immortal spirits tread; For all the boundless universe Is life—there are no dead.

A GOOD STORY OF BISHOP SELWYN. In the autumn of 1857, I spent a few days in a country parsonage. On the Sunday morning, at breakfast, the pastor's wife received a letter, which he tittering told us must be a when he attering told us must be a tit-bit. "Ha, Uncle," exclaimed she, "here are clerical doings exactly to your taste." The writer, a lady in a distant country, narrated that there had lately come into the next parish a new vicar-a very fine young man, who at school had no superior either in Greek or in boxing, and who at the university won honors for his classics and silver cups for his boating. He was beginning in earnest the work of an evangelist among a long-neglected, vicious, and larutal people. He had a plan and a will; but many worthy folk were fearing that his zeal was without knowledge—or wisdom at any rate. One of his or wisdom, at any rate. One of his first measures was to open a school rose against such unheard of proceed-ings. They would run after him, cursing and hooting, and discharging vollies of sods and other missiles. Finding remonstrance vain, he adopted another course on the Wednesday evening in the week before I heard the story. Making a stand in the middle of the road, at the entrance of the hamlet, just as the storm arose, and looking the savages in the face, he addressed them thus, in a firm, quiet voice, which commanded their attention: "My good fellows, I have borne this patiently for some time, but now I must put a stop to it; and I'll do it in your own way. Choose your best men, and we'll fight it out. If I beat, you'll give up, you know." They looked at him unbelievingly; but, throwing his coat on a bush, he added, "I am in earnest; send your man.

The ruffians laid their heads together; and then a burly giant stepgether; and then a burry grant step-ped forth and stripped, and made a furious dash at his reverend chal-lenger, who quietly parried the un-skillful blows and played with them for a few seconds. But, then, a fist was planted in the peasant's chest, and he lay at full length on the ground. Quickly gathering himself up, however, he skulked away to his companions. "Now send your next best and I'll go through the lot of you." Again their heads drew to-gether, and another threw down his jacket; going to work, however, with "Now send your next more cautious energy. But at once a stomacher stretched him on the road. "Your next." Once more a conglomerate of dense pates was formed. "Bill, thee teck him." Bill eyed the hero askance and shook his head-"Thee, Jim; teck th' parson; a shake more decided, and a stiff "Nay, nay; I'se see thee hung fast." And now the first one who was vanduished stood forward, and, like a brave man, called out, "I say, parson, ye're a rare young un, ye ar. I'se tell thee what: we are going to hear you preych." And they dl followed him along the little street, said the writer, and heard the Word quietly, adding, it remains to be seen, what will become of the fight. What did come of it? I heard, a long time afterward, that from that day the men doffed their hats, and the women curt-esied, and the children looked awestricken, when they met or passed him; that the church and schools were filled; that the beer-houses were were filled; that the been noises were nearly all shut up; and that a great moral and religious reformation was in progress. That gentleman had previously been the instrument of a like change in an equally demoral zed parish. I may add, that a few years back he was deemed the fittest clergyman in the church to go out as bishop to a scen; of great personal danger in a heath in country. [Cor. Manchester Examiner.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FIRST DOL-LAR.—One evening in the Executive Chamber, there were present a number of gentlemen, among them Mr. Seward. A point in the conversation suggesting the thought, Mr. Lincoln "Seward, you never heard, did you, how I earned my first dollar?"
"No," said Mr. Seward. 'Well," replied he, "I was about eighteen years of age. I belonged, you know, to what they call down South the 'scrubs'—people who do not own land and slaves are nobody there. 'But we had succeeded in raising, chiefly by my labor, sufficient produce, as I thought, to justify me in taking it down the river to self. After much persuasion, I got the consent of my mother to go, and constructed a little flat boat, large enough to take a barrel or two of things that we gathered with rayself and little bundle, down to New Orleans. A steamer was coming down the river. We have, you know, no wharves along the Western streams, and the custom was, if passengers were at any of the landings, for them to go out in a boat, the steamer stopping and taking them on board. I was contemplating my new flat boat, and wondering whether I could make it stronger or improve it in any particular, when two men came down to the shore in carriages, with trunks, and looking at the different boats, singled out mine, and asked, 'Who owns this?' I answered, somewhat modestly, 'I do.' 'Will you, said one of them, take us and our trunks out to th steamer?' 'Certainly,' said I. I was very glad to have an opportunity of earning something. I supposed that each one would give me two or three bits. The trunks were put on my flat boat, the passengers seated themselves on the trunks, and I sculled them out to the steam boat. They got on board, and I lifted up their heavy trunks and put them on deck. The steamer was in a remote part of the parish and get them on deck. The steamer was the room licensed for week-day about to put on steam again, when I preaching. But all the drunkards called out that they had forgotten to pay me. Each of them took from his pocket a silver half dollar, and threwit on the floor of my boat. I could scarcely believe my eyes as I picked up the money. Gentlemen, you may think it a very little thing, and in these days it seems to me like a trifle; but it was a most important incident in my life. I could scarcely credit that I, a poor boy, had earned a dol-lar in less than a day—that by honest work I had earned a dollar. The world seemed wider and fairer before me. I was a more hopeful and confident being from that time.

Some years ago, there was a notary public in Washington, an old and highly respected gentleman, who had held his office through all the politi-cal twistings and turnings of our capital for nearly twenty years. A young friend was in his office one day, and while sitting by the table picked up a while sitting by the table picked up a small old leather covered book, which, upon being opened, proved to be Thaddeus of Warsaw. He cautiously remarked to Mr. Smith, the notary:

"I see you have a copy of Thaddeus of Warsaw hare."

"Thaddeus of Warsaw!" was the reply. "What do you mean?"
"Thaddeus of Warsaw!" exclaimed the old grantleague. "He greatehed the
